Aging Beautifully!

CEO interview from our March-April, 2016 Selamta magazine

Tewolde says, “Ethiopian Airlines has come a long way in its 70 years, starting from a humble beginning but quickly becoming a leading African aviation group. Of course, Ethiopian continues to age beautifully. Throughout the past seven decades, the airline has established itself as adept in all facets of aviation services: technology leadership, network expansion and aviation mentoring.

“The turn of this century saw the global prominence of Africa and its renaissance. Ethiopian as a Pan-African airline has continued to catalyze this development through its extensive and convenient air connectivity options to 92 international destinations in five continents across the globe. As a result, African cities are now much closer to each other and to the rest of the world than any time in history. Hence it is worthy to mark and celebrate this milestone — a once-in-a-lifetime achievement that deserves recognition.

“Moreover, in the corporate world, age symbolizes strength, endurance and security despite an unpredictable marketplace. A successful anniversary program should be as much about heralding past accomplishments as it is about looking forward. This is a time to connect with both our employees and our customers — those who have helped Ethiopian to survive the competition and establish the strong foundation upon which we will continue to serve them for many years to come.”

Why one national airline is bucking a continent-wide trend

Oct 22nd 2016 | ADDIS ABABA | From the print edition

<http://www.economist.com/news/business/21709075-why-one-national-airline-bucking-continent-wide-trend-well-connected>

INSIDE the atrium of a gleaming new building on the outskirts of Addis Ababa, trainee air stewards flit between the classrooms and aeroplane simulators that surround a large indoor swimming pool. The expensive aviation academy belongs to Ethiopian Airlines, and seems a world away from the unrest that on October 9th prompted the government to declare a national state of emergency. The firm's CEO, Tewolde Gebremariam, brushes off the idea that the airline will be affected. "We are not concerned," he shrugs.

He has reason to be confident about the business. Ethiopian is Africa's largest and most profitable airline, earning more than its rivals on the continent combined. Its expansion has been rapid: by 2015 it served 82 international destinations, with 13 more added this year. According to unaudited figures, it nearly doubled its profits in the last financial year (see chart). And that is amid national turmoil.

It helps that its regional rivals are competing only feebly on routes in Africa. According to the International Air Transport Association, African carriers are likely collectively to record a net loss of $500m this year. Kenya Airways, which has been in the red for four years on the trot, is flogging some of its aircraft and last month announced it would raise more equity. South Africa's national carrier, which Ethiopian overtook in size last year, has been unprofitable since 2011, and could be insolvent without government guarantees.

ETHIOPIA

The Legend of Miruts Yifter, the Shifter

Miruts Yifter, the legend, Ethiopian distance runner at the 1980 Olympics who captured the imagination of the world with his exploitive skills died at the age of 72.

Yifter's crowning achievement was his 5000m and 10,000m double triumph at the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow at age 40, where he earned the nickname 'Yifter the Shifter' for the rapid injections of speed that helped propel him to victory. In both contests, Yifter surged and slowed to confuse his key opponents. The tactic worked.

After unleashing an astonishing injection of speed to win the 5000m and 10,000m at the Moscow Games, he was dubbed 'Yifter the shifter'. Yifter, considered by many as one of the greatest middle distance runners of all time and among those inspired by his victories was a seven-year-old boy called Haile Gebrselassie who was following Yifter's progress on a crackly radio in Ethiopia and dreaming to one day follow in his footsteps.

His victories put Ethiopia on the map in terms of running, and he's still regarded as one of the country's greatest athletes. Haile Gebrselassie — who still holds one of the world's fastest marathon times — recently said he owes his entire career to Yifter.

Miruts was being hospitalised for respiratory ailments Toronto, Canada. Miruts Yifter, "Yifter the Shifter" was laid to rest at a packed funeral in Toronto on Tuesday 27 December, 2016. Ethiopian will always remember Miruts Yifter as one of Ethiopian Legends.
